HE SAW THE KING.

An Incident in the Life of Senator Perkins, of California.

KING OSCAR'S SILVER COIN.

Presented while Under Arrest for Trespassing in the Royal Grounds, still in His Possession—Jack Branscom, His Sailor Companion, and Their Subsequent Meeting—True Tales from the Life of a Vice-Presidential Possibility.

Washington Post: The candidacy of Senator Perkins for the nomination of Vice President on the Republican ticket is regarded as a serious and important move on the political chess board by many members of Congress, and the Senator's friends are recalling with interest the anecdote of his career as a sailor, farmer, and fisher, a great many years before he was elected governor of California and representative of that state in the senate. One of the Californians recently gave in the senator's own words the following interesting and romantic incident in his seafaring career:

"We came into Christiana in the ship Luna in the summer of '53," said the senator, "and my ship mate, Jack Branscom, an English boy, who was with me before the mast, set out with me to see the town. We could not speak a word of Norwegian, naturally, nor read any signs. We wanted to see the king's palace, which we heard was a pretty fine thing to see, and we went for a long circuit around the grounds that surrounded it, trying to find a gate where they would let us in. The soldiers stood us off at all points, but finally we came to a hole in the fence. We crawled through without stopping to discuss the matter, and stroled at will through the magnificent park of the palace. We were enjoying a look at the deer, and probably had plucked a flower or two for our shirt strings, when we were suddenly arrested by a half dozen gendarmes and made to march with them in a good stiff pace towards the main gate. "The sergeant seemed anxious to avoid a party of ladies and gentlemen who were strolling near where he was leading us, but it was of no avail; and as we were passing the party we were halted, and for the first time since our capture heard some English. The gentlemen around whom the party centered asked us what we had been looking for in the grounds. We said we were strangers in that country, young men seeing the world, and that we wished to view the king's palace and to see the king himself. The gentleman said that we had accomplished most of that, for he was the king himself—King Oscar II. And he gave us each a silver coin. He said we didn't spend the night in jail as we expected, but went back to our ship pretty well pleased with our adventure.

"We had a row with the mate soon afterwards and went ashore and stayed all night in the shadow of the hill back of the city. The Luna tried to find us, but had to give it up; and she sailed away without us. We shipped on board a Swedish brig for Guttenberg—didn't know a word of Swedish—but we could tell when we were sworn at; and from Guttenberg we went aboard the battleship Nathaniel Thompson, which was bound for New Orleans. The ship was on the Atlantic railroad—the first road, I believe, that was ever built in that part of the country. At New Orleans Jack Branscom and I parted. I don't remember how it was, for I had yellow fever there and only pulled through by a hairs breadth, and many members of things about that time is dead. I made a new trip back to my home in Bath, Me., and finally started around the Horn for California in the fast clipper Galatea. Then I left the sea. That was in 1857.

The Same Old Jack.

"Twenty-eight years after my little adventure with King Oscar II, I made a Fourth of July trip to Monterey on a yacht with a party of the leading men of my state. I was governor of California then. One of the sailors on the yacht kept looking at me intently whenever he thought I did not see him. He had a queer look in his eyes, and I spoke, but the fact that I was governor seemed to awe him. He eyed me for two days, and at length, when I was alone on deck one time, he approached very respectfully and said: 'Is your name George Clement Perkins, sir?' I told him it was, and that I had been a sailing mate in my day. He asked me if I still had that coin the royal hand of Oscar had given me when I was arrested in the grounds of the Christiana palace, and inquired about several other things which made it absolutely certain that he was none other than Jack Branscom, my old shipmate.

"It was a strange meeting. Here I was governor of a great state and employing several hundred men as sailors. And here was Jack Branscom, after twenty-eight years, the same old Jack Branscom, still before me in the smoking his clay pipe and wearing a hammock and drinking ocean water. He had gained weight and was a month and his keep. My whole life since the time I stood before King Oscar swept before me, and I could hardly believe it all. I sat for a long time talking over old times with Branscom, and when we had finished I told him to report to me for duty as boatswain on board the ship Senator, which was then running up and down the coast for our company. When Jack got there they made him third mate, and I was prepared to promote him if he showed the ability to handle his work. Jack was a walking-beam side-wheel, and represented to Jack the modern innovation which he scorned as a man who has always trusted to the wind. He didn't seem happy as third mate, and he took to drink to drown his sorrow at his promotion. We took him down to a dock and he was more, but that didn't do him any good. And finally he left us and shipped on a clipper bound for Australia, and that is the last I heard of Jack Branscom."

The National Capital—Reduced Rates via Baltimore & Ohio.

The City of Washington is an object of perennial interest to all patriots of America. Not alone because it is the seat of the government, but because it is the greatest and grandest republic the earth has ever known, but also on account of its material magnificence. All Americans take pride in its beautiful avenues, majestic architecture, stately homes, and well stored galleries and museums in themselves, apart from the historic interest with which they are invested. It is a hope and aspiration of all "Young America," at least, at some time or other to visit the capital of his country. The Baltimore & Ohio railroad offers unequalled facilities in aid of this desire, by inaugurating a series of popular excursions at reduced rates. A number of persons from this section have availed themselves of these excursions and have found the train service and other arrangements in keeping with the liberal policy of the Baltimore & Ohio. The third excursion of the series, with this popular line, is announced for Thursday, April 23. Pleasant side trips have also been arranged to points of interest in and about the capital. Trains leave Wheeling 12:25, 1:55, 11:40 a. m. and 3:45, 5:15 p. m. Parlor cars on morning train from Pittsburgh and sleeping cars on the night trains. Tickets $10 for the round trip. Correspondingly low rates from other stations. Tickets will be good ten days, and will be valid for passage from Washington to Baltimore at any time within the life of the ticket. For Pullman car accommodations and other information, address nearest Baltimore & Ohio agent, Thursday, April 23. Don't forget the date, Thursday.

THE WHEELING TEACHERS.

Their Association Had an Unusually Interesting Meeting.

The Wheeling Teachers' Association met yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. After prayer by Prof. Jones, of Lincoln school, a song was sung by a class of boys of Clay school. It was well sung and acted.

A paper was read by Miss Reppetto, principal of Webster school, subject, "Geography." She spoke of the difficulty of teaching geography, and favored teaching by map drawing. First draw outline, then fill in principal points. Current events should be taught when the text book is taken up. Pupils must be led to know that all the countries, cities, rivers and mountains do really exist outside of the map. Take the pupils on imaginary journeys to the different parts of the world. If we succeed in giving the pupils a knowledge of the most important places of the earth, and give them a taste for good reading, we have accomplished much, and we can surely do this much.

This was followed by a song by a class of little girls, "Rock-a-Ring, Ring, Ring." They were loudly applauded. Miss Scott, grammar teacher of Ritchie school, read a short and very well prepared paper on the subject "As the Teacher, So the School." Should this subject not be changed to read, "As the Teacher, So She Would Have Her School to Be?"

A resolution was passed thanking the board of education for granting the privilege to the teachers of attending the round table recently held in the city. The thanks of the lady teachers were tendered the board for the privilege of attending Mrs. Jenness Miller's lecture.

After a short talk by the superintendent on the importance of all the meetings the teachers are permitted to attend, a paper on the subject, "A Trio of Educational Reformers," was read by Miss Moore, of Lincoln school. The paper was well prepared, showing deep thought. Comenius, Pestalozzi and Froebel are the trio. Their methods were the methods now used by our best educators. The paper was well read and well received.

Superintendent Anderson urged that all the teachers who could possibly do so, attend the meeting of the state educational association at Charleston, W. Va., June 30 and July 1 and 2. The principals were appointed a committee to arrange for the best rates possible on the railroads.

His disappearance was not learned until Thursday morning. Miller also deserted a wife and several children." David K. Miller formerly lived in this city and his friends here hate to believe the statements in the dispatch.

SERIOUS COMPLICATIONS.

From the Star, Portsmouth, Va.: An experience that is seldom recorded by any newspaper is that of Mr. Gabriel Levy, of 621 Crawford street, Portsmouth, Va., who, at one time, was a sufferer from a complication of almost incurable diseases, and by the use of a very simple remedy to-day is rendered fully capable of attending to his duties and as strong as ever.

"Yes, it is true that Mr. Levy says: 'I was a sufferer from seven different diseases, either one of which has proved fatal in many cases. I was laid up in bed for months, not able to do the slightest thing for myself, as many well known physicians who attended me can attest. To-day I am well and hearty, as you can see.'"

"I was in Columbus, Ga., when first attacked, and went to the city hospital for treatment. I felt some little improvement, but not enough to warrant me in doing manual labor. My limbs were so weak that I experienced great difficulty in getting about. I grew rapidly worse and at times would experience tingling sensations through my limbs, the nature of which I cannot describe. The pains were terrible, and relief I sought in every conceivable shape. I tried physicians, who were eminent in their profession, without avail, and finally began to lose hope, when Dr. Mitchell, of Columbus, Ga., advised me to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

"Having taken so much medicine without receiving any benefit I was loath to take such a simple thing as pills. However, after being persuaded I resolved to give them a trial. Within a few days I began to feel a little better. As time went on I gradually improved, and to-day I am as healthy and strong as any one. I attribute my complete cure to the free use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

Mr. Levy also says that he believes if he had not used the pills he would never have been able to reach his home in Portsmouth; that they proved a blessing to him. He cheerfully recommends them to the public.

To confirm his statement beyond all doubt Mr. Levy made the following affidavit:

"I swear that the above statement of my case and the use of Dr. Williams' Pills to be true."

Spain and Great Britain.

Philadelphia Inquirer: It is scarcely worth while to become excited over the story that a treaty of alliance has been made between Great Britain and Spain. The fact that the two countries were once reconcilable is hardly worth noting, figure in any discussion of the question. The divorce of Catharine by Henry VIII brought about the quarrel of which the Spanish Armada was an important episode, but all that is ancient history and has nothing to do with the case. The improbability of the story can at once be detected without considering the past relations of the two countries.

It is asserted that Great Britain will undertake to help Spain to fight against the United States for the retention of Cuba, and that, in return, Spain will give Great Britain the privilege of equipping her warships in the Spanish harbor of the country. There is no doubt that Great Britain would like to control the Mediterranean. She holds the key to its control in Gibraltar, but would be better satisfied if she could have as many ships as she pleased in some spacious harbor on the north coast of the sea, say, for example, in Genoa. This would be very plausible, and doubtless many people think that the idea is in harmony with all that we know of Great Britain's aggressive policy. But, on the other hand, there is no principle of international law under which Spain could confer such a privilege upon any nation. If she did such a thing, she would be liable to punishment in an international court founded on Alabama principles, or at the hands of a belligerent at war with Great Britain.

It is equally absurd to talk about Great Britain objecting to the United States Congress adopting resolutions of sympathy with the Cubans, or recognizing them as belligerents, and to think that Great Britain would, in preposterous. The British press has for a year past declared that the struggle in which Spain is engaged is futile, that she is indulging in cruel and barbarous warfare, and is liable to punishment and that there is no excuse for the loss to trade and the destruction of crops which have been caused by her.

In common with the United States, Great Britain has suffered heavy losses through the suspension of commerce with Cuba, and self-interest, which it is declared to largely influence her policy, induce her to use her efforts to have the struggle ended in Cuba. It may be that Spain has made overtures to her, but the most specious promises would hardly blind English statesmen to the uselessness of an alliance with Spain at this juncture. Great Britain may take some action in relation to Cuba, but it is not likely to be anything that will help Spain to continue her injustice and oppression.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be lost forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
